Abstract

Specific case studies of drug-facilitated crimes can offer an interesting perspective into the complicated nuances pertaining to these types of crimes. They can often be difficult to interpret due to minimal or lack of toxicological evidence, often caused by delays in reporting and the rapid metabolism of drugs from the victim's system. Understanding the case history in its totality as well as the matrix tested and limitations of the testing, plays a role in interpretation. This workshop provides various international drug-facilitated crime case examples from a toxicological and prosecutorial viewpoint. It will also offer a platform for audience discussion and feedback.

Learning Objectives

After attending this course, participants will:

1. Be aware of SOFT DFC Committee activities and resources
2. Grasp the importance of information collection in DFC testing by hearing the outcome of actual cases
3. Understand the national standards for DFC testing
4. Apply strategies for DFC testing to improve (lower) detection limits
